NOISE REGULATION

New option for complaints 'doesn't

to address concerns

May

Metro | Toronto

Airbnb is making it easier for people to complain about wild parties or drug dealers renting out their neighbours' properties, but Toronto city councillors say the change doesn't do enough to regulate the space sharing service.

The new complaint function, launched Tuesday, lets anyone make a complaint on the website.

"Those who repeatedly fail to meet our standards and expectations will be subject to suspension or removal from the Airbnb community," wrote spokesperson Christopher Nulty in an email.

The move comes as Toronto struggles with what to do with Airbnb. It's an aspect of the sharing economy which has been somewhat overshadowed by the loud debate over Uber, even amidst complaints about houses being rented out to host wild parties in residential neighbourhoods such as Willowdale.

At least two councillors have introduced motions in an effort to speed up the process of regulating Airbnb, while cities like Berlin crack down on landlords renting out entire units for short-term stays.

"It doesn't quite go far enough," said Coun. Shelley Carroll, of the new complaint function.

But for Carroll, it's not loud parties, but landlords renting properties exclusively on Airbnb that's the biggest danger.

"That's a recipe for disaster for people who need a place to live," she said.

Coun. Kristyn Wong-Tam, called it a "mechanism to do some soft self policing," on Airbnb's part.

"It certainly doesn't go as far as I think it should go, because there's no public accountability lens," she said.

RELAXATION

Some prefer sound of traffic to the rustling of trees: Study

May Warren
Metro | Toronto

From crowded sidewalks to the rumble of the jackhammer, some Torontonians are tortured by the hustle of the city and long to escape to soothing nature.

But a new study says the fast-paced city environment can actually be a break for some.

Published in The Society for Consumer Psychology, the study challenges the assumption that spending time in nature will provide a restorative interlude for the often-rattled urban mind.

"Woody Allen actually said once, 'I'm at two with nature,' because he's the kind of prototypical neurotic New Yorker, who would be very uncomfortable in a natural environment," said co-author Kevin P. Newman.

The study found different people react differently to their environments, and those classified as "neurotic" — a personality type associated with worry, anxiety and moodiness — might find a walk down Yonge Street more refreshing than spending the day on the Toronto islands.

Researchers showed hundreds of people cues such as pictures of urban versus rural landscapes to see what reduced their "mental fatigue," Newman said.

In a study that didn't make it into the paper, they played them recordings of horns and traffic noises, which neurotic

“ We kind of have an inherent cultural bias towards, 'Nature is everything,' and, 'Be one with nature.' **”

Kevin P. Newman

people found more restorative than a wave soundtrack, he added.

The study suggests someone less neurotic might still benefit from nature escapes, such as a walk through High Park.

Jon Hayes, director of programs at High Park Nature Centre, said many visitors appreciate the park's oasis-like qualities.

The centre even offered a 5 a.m. walk this spring just for people to listen to the sound of birds singing.

"I can imagine some people might be startled by a lack of human sounds when they come into High Park, but it usually leaves people feeling really calm," said Hayes. "We get accustomed to so much of that road noise ... the hum of the refrigerator, that when you start to notice those things and you go into a natural area, it really feels good."

Commuters a little closer to Relief

TRANSIT

Province to give $150M for line design and planning

The downtown relief subway line is two steps closer to reality, after city planning staff identified the preferred route for the transit project this week and the provincial government announced funding to design it.

At the TTC's Greenwood complex on Wednesday, Ontario Transportation Minister Steven Del Duca said the Liberal government would give provincial transit agency Metrolinx more than $150 million for planning and design work for the line, which would connect downtown Toronto with the Line 2 subway east of the Don River.

TTC officials called it the most significant funding to date for the relief line, which has been discussed by planners for decades and is considered among the city's top transit priorities.

Mayor John Tory, who joined Del Duca at the announcement, said the line would be "critical" to easing overcrowding on the TTC's existing network.

"Anybody who's taken the TTC and used the Yonge Street subway knows, that there are days when you can't get on train after train, where Bloor and Yonge (station) almost becomes a dangerous place to be in terms of just handling the crowds," Tory said.

Line 1, or the Yonge-University-Spadina line, is currently operating above its capacity of 26,000 people an hour, with 28,000 riders using the subway during its busiest period in its busiest direction. That number is expected to increase to almost 40,000 riders per peak period hour by 2031. The relief line is seen as crucial to siphoning off some of those trips by providing an alternative route into the downtown core.

At a public consultation meeting in Scarborough on Tuesday, city staff revealed what they say is the preferred alignment for the relief subway. The route would run south from Danforth Ave. beneath Pape Ave., and turn west just south of Queen St. East. From there it would run underneath Eastern Ave. until a point west of the Don River, where it would veer north and run beneath Queen St.

Staff have proposed eight stations, including interchanges with Pape Station on Line 2, and Osgoode and Queen Stations on Line 1. There would also be new stations at Queen and Sherbourne, King and Sumach, Queen and Pape, and connections to future SmartTrack stations at Eastern and Broadview and Gerrard and Pape.

Cycling deconstructed

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

Just in time for summer, Cycle Toronto has released a new cycling handbook covering all of the basics. Available in 13 languages, riders can pick up copies at the library, civic centres and city hall, as well as the Cycle Toronto office, CultureLink Settlement Services and Scarborough Cycles hubs on Danforth and Birchmount Bluffs. These are a few takeaways:

- From the seat, derailleurs and brakes to the pedals and valves, the guide shows how to inspect and maintain a bike. There are also safety lessons in the equipment realm — for example, that you should be able to fit two fingers in the space between your eyebrows and helmet.
- You don't need a licence to bike, but you can be fined for violating traffic rules while cycling. In Toronto, only children younger than 13 are allowed to bike on sidewalks — adults risk being ticketed. Disobeying a stop sign can cost you $110 and overall "careless operation of a bike" can land you a hefty $490 fine.
- Riders should ditch their headphones, avoid swerving in and out of traffic and construction zones, and always yield for pedestrians. In case of a crash, a cyclist is entitled to benefits such as money to replace their bike or pay medical bills, even if they're the ones at fault.
- More than 60 per cent of Toronto's households own bicycles, with one in 10 biking to work or school. To accommodate the popularity, you can take your bike onto subway trains except between during rush hours — 6:30 to 10 a.m. and 3:30 to 7 p.m. There are also bike repair stops at a few stations.

ENFORCEMENT

Bike lane parkers getting tagged

Luke Simcoe
Metro | Toronto

After a slow start, Toronto's bike lane parking blitz is officially rolling.

Police handed out 93 tickets to motorists stopped or parked in bike lanes Tuesday, according to parking enforcement supervisor Brian Moniz. That's far more than the 39 that were handed out Monday when the blitz began.

Details on how many were handed out Wednesday were not available.

"On Day 1, we really didn't start the saturation of the campaign until after 11 o'clock," Moniz said. "But now we've got three times more staff out there and we've issued almost three times as many tickets."

Moniz said the numbers don't include friendly warnings given to drivers — or parking scofflaws that got away.

"The big challenge in terms of enforcement is that many of the vehicles parked in bike lanes are occupied," he said, noting current regulations require tickets to be affixed to the offending vehicle. "So for every one ticket that's issued, probably two other people have moved."

That could change next year if the city opts to serve tickets via first-class mail. Doing so would allow bike lane blockers to be ticketed as long as police record the licence plate and make of the vehicle.

"It could solve a big problem," Moniz said. "Right now it's a cat and mouse game."

Moniz doubts the blitz will

The "Right 2 Bike" campaign continues until Friday with scores of officer canvassing downtown to ticket bike lane parkers. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE deter the scores of delivery drivers who routinely park in bike lanes downtown. So Moniz said police have, in recent months, started posting photos of trucks on Twitter and tagging the companies who own them.

"We're publicly shaming these companies in an effort to bring them into compliance," he said.

Subway extension worth cost: Tory

TRANSIT

Mayor says $2B, one-stop update will pay off in future

Mayor John Tory is defending plans to build a one-stop subway extension to Scarborough for more than $2 billion despite new numbers that show ridership for the six-kilometre stretch would see trains that are 80 per cent empty at rush hour.

At a public consultation meeting at the Scarborough Civic Centre on Tuesday night, city planning staff unveiled new projections that said by 2031, at its busiest hour in its busiest direction, 7,300 people are expected to ride the new subway.

That ridership number is half of the upper range of figures presented to councillors in 2013 when they approved the extension.

At the time, city planning staff said that between 9,500 and

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, right, and Mayor John Tory ride a subway on May 6. THE CANADIAN PRESS

14,000 would ride the subway, but since then the projections have been revised downward to accommodate the effect of the planned SmartTrack line and design changes that reduced the number of stops from three to one.

"I can't speak to the numbers that were bandied around before I was here, but I can say that the numbers we're looking at today make this a project that we should do and we must do, and I continue to be very committed to it," Tory said at a transit announcement at the TTC's Greenwood yard Wednesday afternoon.

The mayor said he believes recent reports on the shrinking numbers have been "misleading," arguing other terminal subway stations have similar ridership — an argument also championed by senior city planning staff.

When asked whether that ridership justified the more than $2-billion cost, Tory insisted they were planning for the future and predicted the extension would be a "huge success."

GREETINGS FROM THE NORTH

Campaign will choose best photos to be put on postcards

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

Tired of the "downright boring" photos of the CN Tower that adorn most Toronto postcards, Brian Brown is on a quest to make the old mail medium cool again.

"The postcards that are in stores right now are outdated and don't really represent our city anymore," Brown said, noting the 6ix has a lot more views to offer than a shot of the skyline.

"What's on those cards doesn't capture the current energy and vibrancy of the city and its people."

Throughout the summer, Brown's Greetings from the North campaign is inviting local photographers and mem-

The campaign has a social component too.

For every submission, Life-line Investment — a local real estate developer — will donate $1, with proceeds going to help Toronto's vulnerable youth.

Given the success of local sports teams — including the Raptors and the Blue Jays — and artists like The Weeknd and Drake, Brown said that now is the time to diversify Toronto's image.

"We are not a city of just buildings and water. We're dynamic, hip, diverse and active city," he said.

Support for survivors integral

Lucie Edwardson
Metro | Calgary

Experts are warning that as people begin to return to Fort McMurray, it's important to keep victims of domestic abuse and shelter users front of mind.

Anuradha Dugal, director of violence prevention at the Canadian women's foundation said when a natural disaster occurs, those who rely on shelters need to be found a safe space to live in the wake of a disaster.

"Shelter workers need to confirm that she has a safe place to go and either accompany her or support her in some way," she said.

Dugal said in the case of Fort McMurray, those who were in the shelters there at the time of the evacuation were set up in shelters in Medicine Hat, Lac LaBiche, or with family or friends who were able to keep them away from their abuser.

Situations like the evacuation and wildfires in Fort McMurray and now the return can be very triggering for victims of domestic abuse, said Dugal.

"It's very difficult to have to once again remove yourself from your life and have to go to an entirely new place after having done so already," she said.

A city comes back from its toughest moment

On Wednesday morning, Gerald Wong watched his city come back to life.

"Three days ago it was literally a ghost town," said Wong, a lifelong resident who arrived back in Fort McMurray early to reopen McMurray T.V. Centre, the electronics store he manages.

"I would stand in the middle of Franklin (Avenue), right there," he said, pointing to Fort McMurray's main street.

As the first wave of residents returned to their fire-ravaged city Wednesday, car after car honked at a line of firefighters, who hoisted a Canada flag on their ladders atop an overpass.

After almost a month in exile, Wednesday marked the start of the staged re-entry of the estimated 90,000 thousand people forced to flee the wildfire.

The first zone to be reopened includes downtown, which was relatively unscathed by fire, with major residential neighbourhoods that were more affected opening later in the week.

Standing on the sidewalk on Franklin, morning radio show host Matthew Baron was offering bin holds hundreds of copies of the May issue of a local newsletter that will never be read.

At the Safeway, a rare island of normalcy where one manager said 90 per cent of the stock was tossed and replaced in just four days, Marie Kelly inspected the display of fresh flowers.

She drove through the checkpoint at 4:30 a.m. Wednesday morning, eager to see her apartment for herself.

A ruined playground is a reminder of the rebuilding to come.

Some lawns haven't been maintained in a while.

A family's homecoming

The first thing they noticed is the smell. Well, the lack of it.

"It smells so good," said Heather Thomas, who along with her husband Russell walked into her house for the first time in almost a month Wednesday after being allowed to return to Fort McMurray.

Heather, Russell and their two sons live just outside of downtown Fort McMurray, in a house surrounded by a large garden.

It's an area relatively untouched by the wildfire that forced more than 90,000 to flee the city.

But that's not to say the house wasn't threatened: The hill right across from the Thomas' neighbourhood is a sea of burnt trees. That led to all sorts of stress and worry.

"In the first couple of days, there was no level of comfort around this part of town," Russell said.

Thankfully, none were true.

Inside the house, the couple took in their surroundings Wednesday: Despite the faint scent of smoke and a few things left in a hurry, it was all as if they'd left it that morning rather than in early May.

Having assessed the house's

Russell and Heather Thomas embrace in their home. KEVIN TUONG/FOR METRO

general condition, the couple then went to other areas.

Russell, an artist, headed to his studio out back. He opened the door and looked relieved.

A dozen or so paintings were safe.

The two emphasized how lucky they are compared to the many who have lost houses.

But: "We haven't seen what agencies are lost, what neighbours and friends' and colleagues' homes look like," Heather said.

The next hurdle, Russell added, is knowing who's back, who's coming back and who isn't. ALEX BOYD/METRO

Parliament's social challenge

POLITICS

Overindulgence is easy for many at wine-fuelled gatherings

Life on Parliament Hill, with its parade of free meals and wine-soaked networking events, can make it difficult for even the most stout-willed politicians, staffers and journalists to avoid overindulging at the best of times.

"It's an occupational hazard," said one former senior political aide from a previous Liberal government.

So imagine the challenge for those struggling with alcohol issues, such as Nunavut MP Hunter Tootoo, who stepped down from his cabinet post and left the Liberal caucus Tuesday to seek treatment for what the Prime Minister's Office has only referred to as

"addiction issues."

Tootoo has not spoken about his experience, but former MPs and staffers recall a lifestyle marked by multiple receptions with stakeholders every night, where socializing with a drink in hand is considered part of the job.

Former Liberal MP Marlene Jennings remembers the atmosphere during her time in Ottawa, with a variety of organizations hosting receptions as part of their lobbying efforts on any given night. MPs and senators would circle the room to exchange business it becomes really easy to have that glass of wine and then have the second one and you're not realizing that you're on to your third one," she said Wednesday.

Don Boudria, an Ottawa-based lobbyist and former Liberal member of Parliament, says more awareness about mental health and addiction — and more women on Parliament Hill — means things are not nearly as bad as they used to be.

And they were bad, he said, recalling seeing people drinking themselves literally under

REACTION

PM says idea was Tootoo's

Speaking outside of the Liberal caucus meeting Wednesday, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said Hunter Tootoo's decision was his and his alone, and that it followed "a very difficult situation."

"This was his own choice," Trudeau said. "We will have nothing further to say on this matter."

The prime minister's remarks, however, did not stop widespread speculation about what prompted Tuesday's surprise announcement.

Sources familiar with Tootoo's career as a member of the territorial legislature in Nunavut say he has a history of alcohol problems.

Police in Winnipeg, where Tootoo attended the annual Liberal policy convention on the weekend, went so far Wednesday as to publicly deny that they were ever involved in any sort of incident involving the member of Parliament.

"Winnipeg Police Service has no record of any official police contact with this individual," said a public information officer with the force. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Gun drama on campus

UCLA

Overwhelming response to murder-suicide

A murder-suicide at a UCLA engineering building Wednesday drew hundreds of heavily armed officers who swarmed the Los Angeles campus, where students close to summer break barricaded themselves in classrooms as best they could before being evacuated with their hands up.

About two hours after the first 911 call came in around 10 a.m., with the centre of campus still saturated with officers, Los Angeles Police Chief Charlie Beck declared the threat over. Two men were dead in an office, and authorities found a gun and what might be a suicide note, he said.

Authorities did not identify the men, and a motive was not immediately clear.

The response to the shooting was overwhelming:

Teams of officers in helmets and bulletproof vests who were looking for victims and suspects ran across the normally tranquil campus tucked in the city's bustling west side. Some with high-powered rifles yelled for bystanders to evacuate. Groups of officers stormed into buildings that had been locked down and cleared hallways as police helicopters hovered overhead.

Advised by university text alerts to turn out the lights and lock the doors where they were, many students let friends and family know they were safe in social media posts. Some described frantic evacuation scenes, while others wrote their doors weren't locking and posted photos of photocopiers and foosball tables they used as barricades.

Those locked down inside classrooms described a nervous calm. Some said they had to rig the doors closed with whatever was at hand because they would not lock.

SWAT officers cleared occupants one by one. One man walked out with his hands up and was told to get on his knees. An armed officer searched him and his backpack, then sent him on his way. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FLOODING

Rain pummels French cities

Floods devastated regions across France on Wednesday — in some areas, the worst seen in a century or more. The Seine River overflowed its banks, one French town was evacuated, travellers trapped on a submerged highway were rescued by soldiers and boat cruises in Paris were cancelled.

Meteorologists said more bad news is coming — the waters are expected to keep rising for days.

Drenched tourists were rearranging plans, schools in one region were shut down and the French government pressed to rescue thousands of people trapped in homes or cars in provincial towns.

No casualties have been reported, but emergency workers have carried out more than 8,000 rescue operations from the Belgian border south to Burgundy over the past two days, Interior Minister Bernard Cazeneuve said Wednesday.

Paris City Hall closed roads along the shores of the Seine from the Left Bank in the east to the Eiffel Tower neighbourhood in the west, as water levels rose at least 4.3 metres (14 feet, 1 inch) higher than usual.

Egypt says signals picked up from plane's black box

Egypt said Wednesday that a French ship has picked up signals from deep under the Mediterranean Sea, presumed to be from one of the black boxes of the EgyptAir plane that crashed last month, killing all 66 passengers and crew on board. The development raised hopes the plane's flight data and cockpit voice recorders, known as the black boxes, could be retrieved and shed light on the aircraft's crash. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Spare the children: UN

The UN children's fund issued a stark warning to Iraqi troops and Daesh militants in the battle for Fallujah to spare the children, the most vulnerable among civilians who remain trapped by the fighting for control of this city west of Baghdad. The UNICEF estimated the number of the children trapped with their families inside the city at about 20,000, warning that they face a dire humanitarian situation. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

3D printing tech soars to new heights

INNOVATION

Software will revolutionize construction industry: CEO

There are office printers that spit out documents and others that always seem to jam. And then there those that make the office itself.

A small group of employees in Dubai is starting to move into a new workspace that the emirate says is the world's first functional office building made using three-dimensional printer technology.

Dubai's ruler quietly inaugurated the whitewashed buildings last week, not far from the site of a planned Museum of the Future that is due to open in 2018.

Looking like a mashup of a Jetsons abode and an Apple Store, the compact office was printed out layer by layer over 17 days

The United Arab Emirates says this building is the world's first functional office building made using three-dimensional printer technology, in Dubai. KAMRAN JEBREILI/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS at a cost of $140,000, said Saif al-Aleeli, the CEO of a government initiative called the Dubai Future Foundation that is behind the project. Features include a tree-shaded outdoor garden deck and LED lights that automatically adjust to the brightness outside.

"Why 3D printing? Because it makes sense in terms of cost, in terms of time-saving, in terms of efficiency," the 29-year-old al-Aleeli said.

"We really believe that this technology will revolutionize the construction, the development sector as well as other sectors."

Products made using 3D printing are first designed on a computer and then printed out using a variety of materials, including metal, plastic and concrete.

Developers are finding a growing number of uses for the technology as it evolves.

"The future will be 3D printed," al-Aleeli predicted. "I won't be surprised if in 20 years down the road whole cities will be 3D printed."

The technology has been used in other construction projects too, including a Dutch canal house in Amsterdam. But the foundation says its Dubai office is the first "fully functional 3D printed building," constructed with full services and meant for daily use. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Apple to delay iPhone refresh, analysts say

Can Apple slow the pace of smartphone innovation?

That's the question the tech community is asking as the Apple rumour mill churns with speculation about the company moving to a three-year iPhone refresh cycle, as opposed to its current two-year product plan.

Apple fans are used to the company releasing a major update to its smartphone one year, denoted by the number after its name — like the iPhone 6 in 2014 — incrementally improving the model the following year — the iPhone 6S in 2015.

As such, many analysts were expecting something big coming from this September's model, likely the iPhone 7.

However, many reports are now saying that the company will likely release another product with some improvements and upgrades — an incremental update but nothing revolutionary.

Instead, the big refresh is likely being saved for 2017, which also happens to be the 10th anniversary of the iPhone.

An Apple spokesperson declined to comment on the speculation regarding its future smartphone models. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Pizza Hut to remove artificial ingredients

Pizza Hut said it will remove more artificial ingredients from its pizza pies in the next year at its U.S. restaurants.

The company already removed artificial flavours and colours from its pizzas last year.

Pizza Hut, which has about 6,400 U.S. restaurants, said the preservatives BHA and BHT will be removed from all its meat by next month. Artificial preservatives in cheese will be cut by next year. Chicken will now be free of human antibiotics by March.

DESMOND COLE ON MARIJUANA

The line between needing pot for an illness and wanting it for pleasure needs to be blurred.

The problem is pot stigma, not the "black market."

Last week's police raids of marijuana dispensaries in Toronto exposed an important feature of the so-called "war on drugs" in Canada. For years, most Canadians have told pollsters that pot should be legalized or decriminalized. More and more people are recognizing the medical benefits of weed. Our war, then, seems not so much on marijuana as it is on people who have been selling and using it illegally, especially for recreation.

Pot advocates have warned that the "black market" of presumed gangsters will benefit from the dispensary raids. To me, the "black market" is just another term for the people you bought your weed from before dispensaries.

Our government has exploited the stigma of consuming pot for fun, rather than for health, to criminalize the market and create space for armed, organized gangs to control it. It's going to take a lot more than legalization to end a stigma around weed that has encouraged crime and led to an untold waste of public resources.

It's easy to hate the players in the drug trade, especially those who can't afford a storefront, but the foolish game of prohibition itself is the reason people cannot access marijuana in peace and safety. The problem is not that people with shady motives want to sell weed, but that the government has incentivized such people by making it a crime to grow and sell pot.

Graham Clark, a Toronto criminal lawyer, seized on this in his reaction to the recent dispensary raids. "Every person who now cannot go to a dispensary will instead have to trek into the black market that government and police, through prohibition, create to the great benefit of actual criminals," Clark said.

The latter part of Clark's statement, about government creation of crime through prohibition, is absent from many condemnations of the raids. Rather, the spectre of a dangerous criminal market is being used to explain why police should leave dispensaries alone.

In a news release calling for all charges to be dropped against dispensary operators and employees, the Toronto Cannabis Coalition argued,

"when compared with (government-sanctioned) mail order or the black market, dispensaries in Toronto provide a safe, informative environment where patients can source high-quality medical cannabis."

This statement is true, but the contrast between dispensaries and street drugs reinforces stigma. Just as people who use pot for medicinal purposes have long relied on illegal, recreational suppliers, recreational users have almost certainly been benefiting from dispensaries whose stated purpose is to provide medical marijuana.

Some Toronto dispensaries reportedly have very lax standards for determining a person's medical need for marijuana. If this is true, dispensaries are successfully blurring the line between selling pot for health reasons, and simply helping people get high.

This line needs to be blurred in order to erase pot stigma. Yes, there is a big difference between needing pot for a diagnosed illness and wanting it for pleasure. But the difference should never be used to justify the violence, policing costs, criminal records, prison sentences, and court expenses the government currently employs against recreational users and suppliers.

I don't care if someone without a medical condition can get weed from a dispensary, or her local dealer, or by growing it at home, as long as no one is harmed or threatened in the process.

Removing the stigma associated with marijuana can help us to avoid more foolish time and resource expenditures in the future. For example, in a post-legalization era, the government should make it cheap and easy for people to receive pardons with criminal records related to pot.

There shouldn't be any sanction for smoking weed in public, selling it on the street, or growing small amounts of it on the balcony — it cannot be added to the preposterous regime of provincial-offence tickets for such horrors as drinking in public, begging for change, or sleeping in a public park.

Pot proponents will have to fight for these realities — they will be less successful in doing so if they reinforce the stigma around weed that makes it OK to sell weed in a posh dispensary, but not OK to grow at home, smoke in public, or trade on the street. If people want marijuana, let them have it without shame or sanction.

Instead of reinforcing fear of a black market, let's make such a market irrelevant.

Tootoo's departure has served his country well

Rosemary Westwood
Metro | Toronto

Lately a certain someone has been bemoaning our culture's seeming lack of interest in, even wilful ignorance of, history.

Every time I bring up some newish trend — "white anger in the U.S.!" — he scoffs and utters some variation of "history repeating itself."

It's an irritating recurrence, but given my own spotty sense of the past, I've decided he's got a point.

And so I feel compelled, in the wake of Fisheries Minister Hunter Tootoo's resignation, to remind us all of how badly addiction-and-politics stories can go.

Tootoo — who was a historic appointment, the first northern MP to hold the fisheries file — stepped aside with little fuss this week. He released a statement asking for privacy, and only vaguely explained a need to address "addiction issues." The prime minister issued a similarly restrained statement.

Some, including the Aboriginal People's Television Network, left the story mostly at that. Other media went picking for loose threads. The Globe ran a piece claiming the addiction in question was alcohol abuse, and both it and CTV suggested some kind of incident during the Liberal convention. The Toronto Star followed up with Tootoo's father, who said his son will "pull out of it."

We might expect the additional straggling story, but all in all, it's been a sad but respectable political event. Tootoo managed to leave a high office with his dignity intact, despite whatever he may be dealing with (and I hope he gets whatever help he needs). From what we understand, he executed this graceful exit (for now) for himself. It was an equally dignified but quieter version of fellow Liberal MP Seamus O'Regan's public announcement this winter he was going to rehab for alcoholism. For both these examples, we should be grateful. In not-so-distant history, all was not thus.

Rob Ford's battle with addiction turned Toronto City Hall into an international laughing stock. It sidelined important city business. It wasted citizens' time and money. It caused apparently irreparable schisms between supporters and critics, mostly because Ford lied with reckless abandon about his problems. Even Ford's well-chronicled rehab efforts were marked with controversy. Everything he touched became a trending story, and rarely was the city served in the process.

In stark contrast, we have Tootoo. He had only recently gained so much, and inspired so many. And instead of fighting to hold onto that, he has chosen to take care of himself. Canadians will be better served in the interim, which means he's also chosen what is best for us. That, above all moves by a politician, is praiseworthy.

INTERVIEW

Moby memoir covers sex, booze and making music

Melita Kuburas
Metro | Canada

Money has not been a great motivator for Moby.

When the musician got his first big break, a regular DJ-ing gig at a New York City nightclub called Mars, he was living in an abandoned factory in a crack neighbourhood in Stamford. He had no running water and would urinate in an empty water bottle, showering once a week at other people's homes. But his $50-a-month space had electricity, which meant he could cook oatmeal on a hot plate, and, more importantly, make music.

"It was pretty squalid, but I was considerably happier there than when I lived in a five-level apartment overlooking Central Park, and Bono and Alec Baldwin were my neighbours," Moby says.

In fact, he sees most manifestations of luxury as either gratuitous or something to worry about.

Sitting in a hotel lobby last week wearing jeans, a light gray tee and dark sweatshirt with a few animal hairs clinging to it, the musician has just come back from an interview at a morning TV show in Toronto, discussing his memoir, Porcelain (also the title of a song on his hit 1999 album, Play, which was recently cited by Adele as having inspired her sound on 25).

"Backstage there were a bunch of pugs and I got to spend like, five minutes rolling around on the floor with pugs," says the animal rights activist and long-time vegan. "If I had $500 jeans or a $500 sweatshirt, I would have been scared to do that. And I think there shouldn't be anything in your life that you have to worry about in the presence of pugs."

Born in New York City, Moby grew up in Connecticut, raised by a single mom who occasionally would send him out to buy groceries with food stamps. After his career takes off in the early '90s, he becomes an international star with electronic hits like Go and Feeling So Real. But his success flounders with the release of a punk rock album called Animal Rights, and after eight years of sobriety a post-breakup beer in a San Francisco dive bar leads to regular binge-drinking and severe anxiety.

Moby wrote Porcelain, putting a lot of effort into transporting detail — from the pools of blood of butchered animals in Manhattan's Meatpacking District, to the texture of the sheets and bedspreads in the drab hotel rooms he slept in while on tour. Even the spouts of vomit, semen, and spit that accompany alcohol and drug-fuelled parties are declared.

Through his writing, the past would come to seem more real than the present, says Moby. "It's like Proust with his madeleine in Remembrance of Things Past where there's this cascade; this domino effect," he says. "I would just sort of then remember all these different memories and try to describe them in a way

Sometimes you're making your art or music or writing a reflection of the dynamism of the city, but also as a refuge against it.”

that gave them almost a tactile quality.”

Living in New York wasn't easy — he writes of encounters with drug dealers, angry cab drivers, and a constant search for love and a soulmate that often left him feeling lonely and insecure.

"Cities even at their best are still difficult, challenging places. And oftentimes whether you're an artist or a writer or a musician, sometimes you're making your art or music or writing a reflection of the dynamism of the city, but also as a refuge against it."

Still, Moby's biggest fear was having to leave the city and to go back to the "purgatory" of life in the suburbs, he says.

It wasn't being broke that he was afraid of — it was going back to a "lifeless environment."

Cities, even at their best, are difficult and challenging places says Moby, author of Porcelain. COURTESY MELISSA DANIS

Sprawling plot and vampiric monsters

CONCLUSION

Trilogy's last line was already in Cronin's mind

Sue Carter

For Metro Canada

A decade ago, when Justin Cronin began working on his post-apocalyptic thriller The Passage and its two sequels, he had a few concepts in mind. He knew he wanted the books to feature a sprawling plot and a large cast of characters.

And monsters: vampiric creatures, specifically. Not the handsome, sparkling blood-suckers that dominated popular culture, but a more insidiously sinister monster that could reflect contemporary anxieties.

The Houston-based author wanted to make a certain “sound or music” with words, and he knew exactly what the final sentence of the trilogy’s collective 2,000 pages would be. “I needed to know the rhetoric of the last moment,” he says.

Cronin didn’t give any consideration to where the book would be shelved in stores. The Passage trilogy is a mash-up of genres “piled on top of each other.”

Readers didn’t care how The Passage was labelled — nor were they intimidated by its nearly 800-page length — they were happy to spend sleepless nights with the terrifying New York Times bestseller, and its two sequels, 2012’s The Twelve, and now, the final tome, The City of Mirrors.

Given the books’ vast scale, time-shifts and interconnected stories, a plot summary is challenging: a secret government project backfires, creating a horde of vampirish “virals” with intense powers who essentially destroy civilization, save for a small group of survivors, including a young girl named Amy, who was also injected with the virus.

While some semblance of peace is established by the beginning of The City of Mirrors, it turns out to all be an illusion.

The origin of the trilogy has become part of the books’ legend, and a PR dream. It started as an ongoing storytelling game between Cronin and his then-eight-year-old daughter Iris.

Iris suggested the idea of a “girl who saves the world,” a

The City of Mirrors, the conclusion of Justin Cronin’s Passage trilogy, has been released. JULIE SOEFER far stretch from Cronin’s first books, which focused more on relationship dynamics. Although she is now a college freshman with her own writing career, Iris — who refers to Cronin cheekily as her “work wife” — taught the author a valuable reminder early on about the fundamentals of storytelling.

“There’s an inner critic that you acquire as an adult that tells you what you ought to like, but with a kid it’s just, ‘is this interesting? Is this good? Is it exciting?’ That was a pretty good standard.”

Born in 1962 shortly before the Cuban Missile Crisis, Cronin grew up “during the most dangerous time on the planet,” believing it was possible he could be incinerated at any moment, which gave him an early taste for post-apocalyptic literature.

While his books tap into literary themes that have been around since the Bible, the trilogy is loaded with decidedly modern anxieties, with references to 9/11, global warming, viral disease and his own panicked experience during 2005’s Hurricane Rita, when Houston was evacuated just weeks after Hurricane Katrina hit New Orleans.

So does Cronin have insight as to why so many people love to read about the things they fear the most?

His own pet theory is that “by reading the story, we are cast in the role of the survivor. You close the pages and the beautiful world is still here, and it’s enormously reassuring.”

CONDO TRENDS

Many T.O. condos have great outside spaces

Duncan McAllister
For Metro Canada

As if by magic this week, someone seemingly flipped a switch and instantly turned winter into summer.

Canadians waste no time in starting to enjoy the short, hot season.

From Zen gardens to urban agriculture, basketball courts, rooftop cinemas, and infinity pools, outdoor amenity spaces are getting a lot of attention from condo developers and purchasers alike.

After the May 24 weekend, condo terrace gardens begin to bloom, and balcony barbecues get fired up. Some buildings even boast spa-like or resort-style outdoor amenities.

Here are some of our condo picks that would help you endure a hot and humid "staycation" in the great urban outdoors.

Sonic condos is offering a whopping 25,000 square feet of indoor and outdoor amenity space and an onsite public park.

"The design of these outdoor spaces was influenced by the people we anticipate will live at Sonic," said Robert Ng, Principal at NAK Design Strategies.

"This was a rare opportunity in a city of sidewalks and concrete. Called POPS, or privately-owned public spaces, it's owned by the developer but made available for public use and access."

Jordan Teperman, EVP from Haven Developments talks about the rooftop terrace at the new SIX25BV condos.

"We wanted to provide an open environment whereby residents could congregate to enjoy the roof top amenities such as the bocce ball and outdoor kitchens and enjoy the Toronto-Bayview Village skyline."

The Daniels Corporation's Lighthouse Tower is rich with outdoor amenities including community gardens, and an outdoor tennis and basketball court.

"We have integrated amenities that build on the City of the Arts theme by creating vibrant outdoor spaces designed for cultural events, music, and public art," says Daniels' marketing VP, Simona Annibale.

And Menkes' Harbour Plaza promises to have exquisite outdoor landscaping, especially when lit up at night.

"Our objective was to create a serene outdoor urban oasis for residents, including an extensive landscaped terrace with a reflecting pool and a sunset lounge offering spectacular views of the city," says Mimi Ng, Menkes' VP of sales and marketing.

In midtown, at 150 Redpath, a joint development by Freed Developments and Capital Developments, the new condo promises to offer plenty of outdoor options.

"Designed to be the scene for the summer, residents can go from day to night on the rooftop. This is a lifestyle-focused rooftop playground unlike any other in the city," says Kalliopi Karkas of Freed Developments.

VIDA CONDOS

VIDA vibrant in Bayview Village

CONTRIBUTED

Project overview

Castle Group's new VIDA project will have three mid-rise buildings that back onto a quiet residential area. It features a stepped design and boasts a convenient location across from shopping and the subway.

Location and transit

VIDA is located in the walkable and transit-friendly Bayview Village neighbourhood. Residents will be close to two TTC subway stops along the Sheppard line and Highway 401. The nearby Oriole GO rail station gets you downtown within 45 minutes.

Building amenities

The condo features a fully equipped fitness centre, a VIP sports bar and a master guest suite. There's also a landscaped courtyard with barbecue, a WiFi club lounge and a private party room.

In the neighbourhood

The nearby Bayview Village Shopping Centre offers residents world-class shopping. Closer to Yonge, there's the Art Gallery of North York and the Toronto Centre for the Arts. There's plenty of green space including Rean Park, Hawksbury Park and Bayview Village Park.

SIX LESSONS FOR THE FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER

How do buyers hoping to break into the competitive and pricey home market prepare for their first purchase? Here are six of the most important lessons first-home buyers can learn:

Lesson #1: Figure out your budget.

Aside from your down payment and mortgage, "there are other costs associated with the transaction, as well as the setting up and running of your new home, like legal fees, home repairs, furnishings and maintenance," says Erica Nielsen, VP of Home Equity Financing at RBC. "Look to your mortgage specialist to help you set up a realistic budget."

Lesson #2: Get preapproved.

"We hear stories about people who look and even purchase a home that stretches the bounds of what they can afford," says Nielsen. "Get preapproved first so you can be looking for homes that are relevant to what you can actually afford." It's never too early to find out how much you can afford, and put the preapproval in place. It just means you're ready, and there's no commitment to buy.

Lesson #3: Decide what's most important.

"Think about what's most important to you at this stage of life and over the longer term." Nielsen suggests looking at a five-year horizon and weighing those things that are most important, then aligning them as closely as possible to your budget.

Lesson #4: Surround yourself with a good team.

Talk to people and ask for recommendations. "Most importantly, you need to work with experts you trust," says Nielsen: a good mortgage specialist to help with your budget and financing and a real estate agent who understands your needs and the neighbourhood you want.

Lesson #5: Consider unique approaches.

Fixer-uppers, income properties and sharing ownership are just a few creative ways to make a home affordable, but educating yourself is key. "Should you purchase with someone

The key step for first-time home buyers is to surround yourself with experts you trust. iStock else, you need open communication; be clear about what's affordable and agree on an exit strategy if someone wants to sell out," advises Nielsen.

Lesson #6: Don't let a few disappointments get you down.

In a competitive real estate market, it's important for first-time homebuyers to realize it may be necessary to bid on multiple homes. "Focus on the end game and not each individual bid," says Nielsen.

"First-time buyers will eventually find a home they're delighted with. Remember, there are many houses out there that will meet your needs and your budget."

LEGAL MATTERS

Lack of due diligence can ruin a rental

Jeffrey Cowan

For Metro | Canada

Q: I recently signed an agreement of purchase and sale for a home I plan on renting. When we did our home inspection (thanks to your advice) we noted that there were minor cracks in the cinder block foundation in the crawl space below the sunroom on the back of the house. My realtor suggested we get a foundation specialist in to take a look at the wall that was partially obscured by a whole bunch of boxes. We made an appointment the day before the home inspection condition was to run out, but we were denied access to the property by the vendor. The realtor for the seller indicated that there was another party interested in the property so we proceeded to waive the condition and firm up the deal.

We went back for a further visit and found that the boxes had been moved and there was a very large vertical crack in the foundation that had been covered up. What can we do?

A: It seems that your eagerness to land the property got in the way of your prudent due diligence. Going back to the vendor and saying that they covered up a latent defect is certainly a possibility, but you will most likely get a response back that you had an inspection condition that you waived — even though the vendor denied you a further inspection with a foundation expert the day before the condition expired. You may have a fight on your hands.

There is a fundamental principle in real estate law: caveat emptor. Let the buyer beware. I don't think I can summarize this any better.

Needed repairs — like cracks in the foundation — can be costly and will require more than a band aid solution. ISTOCK

Construction builds jobs and economy

Bryan Tuckey

For Metro Canada

The building, development and professional renovation industry is one of the largest employers in the GTA, creating thousands of jobs every year.

Last year, our industry employed 196,603 people in new home construction, renovation and repair, according to estimates prepared for the Canadian Home Builders' Association based on Statistics Canada and CMHC data.

That's an increase of more than 40,000 jobs since 2014.

The number of jobs in the new homes industry is directly influenced by new housing starts, the number of new homes breaking ground.

In 2015 there were 44,092 new housing starts across the GTA, a 47 per cent increase from the previous year.

More new homes under construction mean more jobs for GTA residents, because building new communities is a multi-faceted process involving the hard work of hundreds of industry professionals. Every construction crane you see represents up to 500 jobs.

In addition to new home development, residential renovation is a key part of the industry's economic impact, responsible for half of the jobs in the industry in

Last year in the GTA, $11.4 billion in paid wages were earned by industry professionals. Much of these wages were in turn used to purchase things like groceries, clothes and cars and thereby support growth in other industries and contribute to the economic prosperity of our region.

More new homes under construction mean more jobs for GTA residents, because building new communities is a multi-faceted process

Statistics Canada estimates that the industry contributed more than $30 billion to the GTA economy, resulting in billions of dollars in tax revenue for various orders of government.

The industry's also has a major impact on the provincial economy. Earlier this year, Ontario Premier Kathleen Wynne cited housing starts as the biggest driver of GDP growth in our province in 2015.

A healthy new-home construction, renovation and repair industry is a significant contributor to the GTA economy and is critical to the economic well-being of our region, province and country. It's essential to all of us.

Aaron Sanchez and three relievers combined to keep the Yankees off the scoreboard and the Toronto Blue Jays rocked New York's bullpen in a 7-0 victory to complete a three-game sweep over their AL East rivals on Wednesday.

Edwin Encarnacion and Justin Smoak drove in two runs and Michael Saunders plated another over Toronto's (29-26) five-run seventh inning.

Josh Donaldson broke a scoreless tie with an RBI single in the fifth, Saunders scored on a

The Toronto Blue Jays sent utility man Jimmy Paredes to the Philadelphia Phillies for cash or a player to be named later.

Osorio and Hamilton double down for TFC

CANADIAN CHAMPIONSHIP

Canuck pair shine to earn first leg edge over Impact

Jonathan Osorio and Jordan Hamilton each scored twice as Toronto FC showed off a made-in-Canada attack in a 4-2 win over the Montreal Impact in the first leg of their Amway Canadian Championship semi-final Wednesday night.

Montreal got two late goals to make it close: substitute Michael Salazar headed in a marvellous Didier Drogba cross in the 86th minute and then Drogba himself beat Clint Irwin with a free kick in stoppage time.

The two away goals make the second leg next Wednesday in Montreal far more interesting. The Impact fielded the more established team on paper but failed to deliver for the first 85 minutes and were schooled by a young Toronto squad before an approving BMO Field crowd of 22,143 that included Raptors big man Bismack Biyombo.

Montreal was reduced to 10 men in first-half stoppage time when captain Patrice Bernier was shown a straight red for a studs-up tackle on Toronto midfielder Daniel Lovitz. An irate Lovitz bounced up and went after Bernier, precipitating a melee. With no Sebastian Giovinco (adductor), Jozy Altidore (hamstring) or captain Michael Bradley (Copa America), Toronto was without US$18.4 million worth of designated players based on their salaries this season.

Osorio, a 23-year-old attacking midfielder from Brampton, Ont., opened the scoring in the 13th minute, able to corral a Morgan cross at the edge of the six-yard box and knock it in before the Impact defence reacted. He scored again in the 34th, slotting in a Babouli cross from a Morgan throw-in. The ball went to a lunging Hamilton first and then bounced back to Osorio, who again found separation from the defence.

Hamilton, a 20-year-old forward from Toronto, made it 3-0 in the 60th minute, skillfully making room for a shot after a nice flick-on from Babouli and deft pass from Cheyrou. He scored again in the 80th with a beautiful move to create space for the shot after a fine pass from Steven Beitashour before Drogba inspired the Montreal comeback.

The Impact had trouble breaking down the Toronto defence and were often reduced to stroking the ball around in their own half. The tournament winner advances to the CONCACAF Champions League where a berth in the FIFA Club World Cup is up for grabs.

Toronto has won the title four times to Montreal's three and Vancouver's one.

Iguodala key to Finals return

NBA PLAYOFFS

Dubs forward a shut-down defender late in post-season

All season long, MVP Stephen Curry, Klay Thompson and Draymond Green drew the attention and accolades.

When it comes to the biggest moments of the playoffs, that's when the Golden State Warriors turn to Andre Iguodala.

Last year's NBA Finals MVP is a major reason why the defending champions are back in this spot with a chance to repeat. "He's always kind of our unsung hero. He never has the numbers that jump out at you in the box score, so people don't write about him or show him much on the highlights," coach Steve Kerr said. "But he's a phenomenal defensive player and he's an incredibly intelligent player. He settles us down on offence and takes the toughest assignment on defence."

Not bad being compared to Scottie Pippen, either.

Iguodala's stingy, reliable defence while regularly drawing the opponent's best player has earned him that very compliment from Kerr, a former teammate of Pippen's on the Chicago Bulls.

Last June, the play of Iguodala against LeBron James helped swing the NBA Finals for the Warriors, and he was called upon again to handle the daunting load that is Kevin Durant in the deciding Game 7 of the Western Conference final.

He shined, as usual. The unflappable Iguodala appeared loose while joking around with teammates on the Oracle Arena court after Wednesday's practice ahead of Game 1 against the Cavaliers on Thursday. He played 43 minutes in just his second start of the season and first of these playoffs for the 73-win Warriors in a 96-88 win Monday night.

In the last two games when the Warriors depended on his defence against Durant, he played more than 81 minutes combined for his highest two outputs of any regulation game all season.

RECIPE Sundried Tomato and Spinach Farfalli with Walnuts

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

Ready in
Prep time: 5 minutes
Cook time: 15 minutes

Ingredients

- 3/4 cup chopped walnuts
- 1/4 cup extra virgin olive oil
- 3 cloves garlic, minced
- 1/4 cup drained and sliced oil-packed sun-dried tomatoes
- 1/4 teaspoon dried crushed red pepper
- 2 cups baby spinach
- 1 pound farfalle pasta
- 1 cup ricotta cheese
- 3 tablespoons vegetable stock or water
- freshly grated parmesan cheese

Directions

1. In a small skillet, warm walnuts over medium heat so they release their oils and are warm, about 3 minutes. Remove from heat and place in small bowl.

2. Bring a pot of salted water to a boil. Cook the pasta until al dente. Scoop a bit of pasta water from the pot before draining.

3. In a large skillet over medium heat, heat oil and then add garlic, sun-dried tomatoes and crushed red pepper. Sauté until garlic is a golden brown, about 3 minutes. Add a handful of spinach in batches and cook until each batch is wilted.

4. In a large serving bowl, whisk ricotta cheese with stock or water. (Use pasta water if you don't have any stock handy.) Then add spinach mixture, pasta and walnuts; toss to combine. Add salt and pepper to taste and grate fresh parmesan cheese over top and serve.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
This is a good day for financial negotiations, but guard against extravagance. Nevertheless, look for ways to boost your income and get value for your money.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
This is a strong day for you. The Moon is in your sign dancing with lucky, moneybags Jupiter. Financial speculation might interest you.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
You will enjoy relaxing at home if you get the chance. You want to cocoon and be by yourself. In any case, this is an easy-going day.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Time spent with a female friend will be rewarding today. This person might encourage you to explore new ideas about politics, religion or long-distance travel.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
You make a great impression on others today, and this impression ultimately might bring you more money in the future. Don't hesitate to be generous to someone.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Shake things up a little, because you need some adventure today. You want to do something different. A short trip or an interaction with someone unusual will please you.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Be open to the offers of others, because you can benefit from the wealth and resources of others today. In turn, you might be generous to someone at work. (What goes around, comes around.)

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Relations with others, especially partners and close friends, are warm and friendly today because people are upbeat. Make plans to have fun in the future.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
It will be easy to get the cooperation of others at work today. If you do this, something will happen that makes you look good in the eyes of your boss.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
This is a playful day for your sign! Make room for some fun activities with romantic interests, friends or children, because you will enjoy yourself.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Home and family are your primary concerns today. In fact, this is a good day to look into real estate possibilities or how to improve your home.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Because you are in such a positive frame of mind today, others want to be in your company. Everyone likes to be with someone who is upbeat and happy.
